Torres Strait Islander Scavenger Hunt Answers:

1. The Torres Strait Islands lie in the Torres Strait, which separates the northern tip of Australia and the island of New Guinea.
2. There are over 100 islands in the archipelago but people live on only 18 of them.
3. Colonists began to operate many fishing boats in the strait. Missionaries soon spread Christianity through the islands and outlawed many traditional practices. The British also employed workers from the South Sea Islands, who brought additional foreign influences to the Torres Strait Islands.
4. Kala Lagaw Ya and Miriam or Miriam Mir.
5. The Islanders were hunter-gathers and farmers. They fished and hunted sea animals as well as birds. They farmed and gathered wild plants.
6. Farming was particularly important on the strait's eastern islands, because of their fertile volcanic soil. Some of the rocky western islands had mudflats with abundant wildlife, so hunting was important there.
7. The people were organised into clans. Men typically hunted, fished, and headed the households and clans. Women were primarily responsible for taking care of children and the home. Women also fished and gathered wild plants.
8. The Torres Strait Islanders used songs and stories to convey their histories and beliefs. They performed with drums and other percussion instruments, as well as horns made from shells. Storytelling was also important.
9. Traditional religious ceremonies on the islands featured music, dance, and elaborate masks. Some masks were made of turtle shell and adorned with feathers, shells, and other materials.
10. Islanders used their canoes for fishing as well as for visiting, raiding, and trading with other communities on the other islands.
11. The missionaries outlawed many of the Islanders' dances, songs, and religious practices. The teachers introduced elements of Pacific Island cultures and languages together with their own understanding of Christianity. The Islanders also combined their own traditional rituals and beliefs with Christian practices and ideas.
12. Australian government authorities placed Torres Strait Islander children in institutions, missions, and foster homes in an effort to force the children to adopt Western culture. Many children grew up not knowing their culture.
